Christian Women's Fellowship Meets

The Christian Women's Fellowship met Monday afternoon, February 19, at 3:30 p.m. in the church parlor of the First Christian church. The business session was opened by everyone repeating the Lord's Prayer, and this part of the meeting was presided over by Mrs. Oliver Adams, the president. After the reading and approval of the minutes of the last meeting and the treasurer's report several new items of business were presented and acted upon. Among these were the giving of money instead of sewing for a Bazaar. Interest shown in this way of giving to the women's work of the church was very gratifying. Also a Fellowship meeting and dinner for all of the families of the church was announced for the evening of February 28. This meeting is under the sponsorship of the Laymen's League and the Fellowship committee and it was announced that everyone would receive a letter concerning this meeting. The group also voted to contribute toward the crusade so that this church might reach its accepted goal before the end of the February.

The program was opened by Mrs. George Dodds giving a very inspirational devotional. This was followed by Mrs. Oliver Adams presenting a most interesting discussion of the next lesson in the study course, "Strong Son of God." Circle No. 1 was awarded the president's dollar for having the greatest number of members present. The meeting was closed with the missionary benediction.

Lawmen Want Power Over Employees

Little Rock, Feb. 20.—Arkansas senators have acted to increase the general assembly's power over state employees.

The senate yesterday approved, 25 to 7, a bill expanding legislative powers over all supervisory and law enforcement jobs.

Sponsored by Sen. Ernest H. Nicholson of Harrison, the bill would give the senate authority to confirm the appointment of all state employees making $2,400 or more per year. The house would have the right to approve those making less than that amount whose duties were confined to a single county.

The measure passed without debate. Nicholson also introduced a measure calling for another session of the legislature next year, to begin the second Monday in January. Assembly sessions are set by law for every two years. Nicholson's bill would provide a 30-day meeting, which he said was needed because of the national emergency. He contended the two-year gap was too long in the face of a threatened world crisis.

An amendment to the state hospital's 1951-53 appropriation was pushed through the senate by Sen. Ellis Fagan of Little Rock. It would strengthen the institution's board of control in collecting payments from relatives of patients who are able to contribute to the patient's support.

A bill providing for public accounting of campaign contributions to candidates for governor, U. S. senator or congressman was passed by the senate, 25 to 1.

The measure, sponsored by Sen. Grover C. Carnes of Stuttgart, would force candidates to report all donations of $25 or more, and provides stiff penalties for violations.

Appropriation bills, totaling more than $10,000,000 were passed. The largest was for $7,000,000 to match federal funds for highway construction. None were controversial.

Steamboat Johnson, Dies in Memphis

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 21.—(AP)—Harry S. (Steamboat) Johnson, one of the most vivid baseball umpires who ever ducked a pop bottle, died in a hospital here last night.

Steamboat, who retired from active duty about four years ago, was a veteran of 31 years of umpiring—27 of them in the Southern association.

He died at the age of 66, shortly after an operation. Johnson, whose home town was Pottsville, Pa., had been in ill health for over a year.

The genial, portly arbiter was a living legend in the Southern. Though he retired, he never settled down. Last year he ran a baseball umpires' school in Kissimmee, Fla., and planned another this winter before becoming ill.

Baseball players swore admirably that Johnson could whisper louder than a steamboat whistle. He called balls and strikes longer than any Southern umpire.

His most famous gesture was his habit of exhibiting, with imposing dignity, an optometrist's certificate that he was blessed with 20-20 vision. This is answer to disapproving roars from players or fans.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Copyright, 1950

By King Features Syndicate.

I had more than half expected the heavens to fall in consequence of my daring to name in print one Arthur J. Goldsmith, a New York broker of mysterious means, who runs a propaganda layout from a three-room political flat in the Waldorf Tower. This plot is disguised on the letterheads of his several committees, by the demure address, "100 East 19th Street." I was told to be afraid of this guy because he had mysterious influence and would hex whoever should oppose his. I was in fear beside the phone, the wire hasn't come which says that I am canned.

I think it is a good thing to poke old characters who have been built into dragons in the last few years. I think it is good even for the dragons.

Goldsmith refused to speak to me by phone and was pretty nasty, too. But I have learned that he was taken up in an attempt to organize an outfit which would have been the republican equivalent of the thing called "Americans for Democratic Action," which almost dissolved the democratic party into Fascist Socialism.

The New York Times covered the "organization" meeting of his devices. It said, under a Philadelphia dateline: "A group of Republican leaders from more than a dozen states today formed an organization called 'Americans for Democratic Action' designed to help 'revitalize' the party." It didn't name these "leaders" though.

Those at the meeting included Russell Davenport, still described, by courtesy, I presume, as writer, editor and advisor to Wendell Wilkie in the 1940 presidential campaign, and Arthur J. Goldsmith, retired New York businessman.

If Davenport is a writer and editor I am out of step, because his last connection of importance that I heard of was something with Henry Luce, who let loose the time style jabberwocky on our journalism, and the affair with Wilkie was so futile and silly that I wouldn't want it mentioned if I were Davenport.

Goldsmith is a leader he has introduced a new switch in leadership, because he refused to talk and, though he promised me a letter, I haven't got it yet.

Herbert Swaps, who belongs to some of the paper groups, of which about a half dozen operate from Goldsmith's apartment in the Waldorf Tower, told me Goldsmith was afraid of me.

Well, maybe he had better be. One Henry Varnum Poor, identified by the Times as a former president of the Young Republican Club of New York, said Republican advance would have an office at 300 Lexington Avenue, New York.

He said they wanted to assure the Asian people that the U. S. A. didn't want to intrude in their affairs in a dominating or possessive manner. And wanted, moreover, to assure the Asians that we were prepared to help them defend their freedom.

This all sounds so harmless that I am suspicious and I find aid and comfort in these thoughts in a piece by Willard Edwards, of the Washington Bureau of the Chicago Tribune. Willard took a look at this thing and wrote:

"A self-styled 'Republican advance' movement was disclosed today on Capitol Hill. It secretly originated at a Fair Deal left-wing group meeting last April. It has a financial base who helped out Senator Charles McNary, who was defeated in 1948. Mystery has clouded the origin of a 'declaration of principles' issued July 1, 1950, at Philadelphia, which was given much prominence in the Eastern Internationalist Press. The sessions preceding the issuance of the statement were clouded in secrecy. The names of the Republican leaders from more than a dozen states, who were said to have participated, were not made public. Republican leaders conferred three months ago on a warning against the new left-wing strategy which, having weakened the Democratic party to the point of acceptance of a Socialist philosophy, was now to be turned upon similar infiltration of the Republican party."

Edwards said Goldsmith was the financial backer of the movement and called him a shadowy figure, whose name "figured in the testimony before a Senate committee, which inquired into charges that corrupt methods were used to defeat Senator Wheeler in the 1948 Democratic primary. Goldsmith was identified as secretary of the committee on public affairs, which contributed $1,250 to the campaign funds of Wheeler's opponent."

In connection with that campaign, Senator Johnson, a Democrat from Colorado, said one eastern group circulated a "Vile, libelous and cowardly attack on Wheeler."

I believe Wheeler, himself now practicing law in Washington, wrote me that he had come by correspondence in which one of Goldsmith's organizations "boasted of the fact that they beat me in Montana and also beat Republicanism in West Virginia, who opposed the twice open door for Asiatic peoples." I checked and found that Wheeler did contribute money to Erickson (Wheeler's primary opponent). I also informed my good friend, Pat McCarran, senator from Nevada, that the same crowd that went after the same going after him."

Wheeler was dead right. Goldsmith's letterhead bundles in the 100 Tower, under the name of the of 400 East 30th Street, sent more than $5,000 to Nevada for McCarran's opponent. Pat won nevertheless and now there is going to be fun. A coalition of Democrats and Republicans in the senate are vying to tear the mask off societies which have been in messing around in state elections far from the homes of their members for the purpose of knocking off men who opposed their secret purposes.

The purpose is to control congressional committees and control laws on immigration.

The bashful Mr. Goldsmith is going to read quite a lot about himself after his long career as a fence-raider of the Waldorf Tower.

SPORTS ROUNDUP

By Hugh Fullerton, Jr.

By JACK HAND (For Hugh Fullerton, Jr.)

New York, Feb. 21 — They say the field for the $65,000 commission handicap has been reduced to four. Still in the running are Jim Farley, Governor Frank Lausche of Ohio, George Trautman of the minor leagues and Happy Chandler, defending champion.

Latest tip is that baseball may come out of its March 12 "show-down" meeting at Miami Beach, Fla., with no commissioner at all. Anti-Chandler men expect to show Happy his re-election is impossible because of a strong non-judge bloc that never will vote for him. In that case, they hope Chandler will step down.

Happy's helpers count at least seven votes on a first ballot. They hope to lure five more to assure re-election, but recognize the strong midwest support for Lausche. Such pro-Chandler men as Cleveland's Ellis Ryan and Cincinnati's Warren Giles might be swung to the Ohio bandwagon.

A prominent baseball executive, whose name cannot be used for obvious reasons, predicts a stalemate at Miami Beach. If Chandler accepts a stalemate as defeat and resigns, a three-man commission would rule the game. Fredrick Ford Erick of the national Will Harbridge of the American and a third man to be named by the two presidents would form the commission.

Miller completes the cycle of Rubeck regulars benched by injuries in this hard-luck campaign for them, the team which had been expected to make a runaway of the Southwest title race.

Previously knocked out of action for one or more games by various ailments were Walter Kearns, Bob Ambler, Toar Hester, Jack Hess, Sammie Smith and Gene Lambert.

Criticism of Askew's style of baseball had died out, what with the Razorbacks riding a six-game winning streak and having won seven of their last nine games.

Askew said on Jan. 12 that he would be willing to resign if the Razorbacks failed to win ten of their last 12 games. That record can't be accomplished in that allotted two defeats already have been suffered and one game was canceled. Two games are left to play.

But there's little likelihood that Askew will be asked to quit in the wake of such a comeback. Most fans would be happy to settle for nine wins in the last 11 — which might be good enough for a share of the conference championship and a berth in a playoff to determine the loop's representative in the NCAA tournament.
